THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

England's Parliament Reassembled Yesterday.

The Queen Congratulated Members on the Situation.

Parnell Unanimously Endorsed by the Nationalist Party.

Gladstone Urges Him to Retire from the Leadership.

The Queen's Speech.

LONDON, November 25.—Parliament reassembled today. The queen's speech congratulated them upon the successful administration of affairs during the past year. Reference was made to the settlement of the Newfoundland fishery question and the boundary lines of the British possessions in Africa. She urged strict economy in the future. On Irish matters she said: I have learned with deep regret that a serious deficiency of the potato crop in Ireland threatens a recurrence of those periods of severe distress to which the population of the western counties is peculiarly exposed by the industrial and economic conditions under which they live. I trust the measures of my government may mitigate the immediate evil and diminish the probability of its return. It appears to me desirable for the increase of contentment and the termination of political disturbances throughout Ireland to take measures for augmenting the number of owners engaged in the actual cultivation of the land. A measure having this object in view will be laid before you. In case time for further legislation is found, I have directed the preparation of bills for the enactment of a reform system of county government in Ireland, analogous to that put in operation in Great Britain, for the establishment of district councils, for the extension of facilities, for purchasing small parcels of land in Great Britain. In the discharge of the arduous duties assigned you I commend you to the guidance of Almighty God.

After the reading of the queen's speech, Mr. Balfour gave notice that he would introduce four bills relating to Ireland.

Mr. Gladstone gave notice of the introduction of a bill to remove the disability which prevents Catholics from occupying the offices of lord chancellor of England and lord lieutenant of Ireland.

After a few members had spoken, the address was agreed to. This is the first time in 15 years that the address has been agreed to on the day of the opening of parliament.

Opening of the Commons.

LONDON, November 25.—There was a full attendance at the opening session of the house of commons. Mr. Parnell was present and took the seat he usually occupied, but soon retired to the lobby. When the deputy speaker read the letters announcing the conviction of Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien of inciting the tenants on the Smith Barry estate in Ireland to refuse to pay rents, Mr. Parnell reappeared, and from the extreme end of the benches, below the hallway, pushed his way forward to a seat on the third bench. Mr. Sexton sat on his right and Mr. McCarthy on his left, and the three conversed. Shortly after Mr. Parnell appeared, Mr. Gladstone entered the house, and was greeted with loud cheers.

Mr. Parnell entered the house of commons at 2 o'clock. The first member to greet him was Mr. Cunningham who accosted him in the lobby and shook him warmly by the hand. Mr. Parnell, after congratulating Mr. Corbett, a home rule member, upon his recent marriage, managed to evade the crowd of journalists who filled the lobby with the hope of obtaining an interview with the Irish leader, and left the house accompanied by Mr. Justin McCarthy.

The Parnell members did not know until after the reading of the queen's speech at what time they were to meet Mr. Parnell, who had not communicated with his followers since the sending out of the circular calling the meeting. The nationalist members all declared that if Parnell were elected to retain the leadership he would receive the full support of his party. Individual nationalists, however, recognizing the feeling of the English liberals in the matter, expressed themselves as opposed to Parnell retaining the leadership.

No one knew what Parnell's decision would be, but all declared that he would do the right thing. The liberal members were almost unanimously of the conviction that Parnell would have to go.

Among those who greeted Mr. Parnell as he made his way to his place in the house of commons was Mr. Jacob Bright, who rose from his seat as Mr. Parnell approached, and shook the Irish leader by the hand.

Mr. Balfour announced that he would reintroduce the Irish land bill on Thursday next.

Mr. W. H. Smith, the government leader, intimated that the government would take the whole time of the house until the leading bills were read a second time. He said the government did not intend to appoint a commission to inquire into the Emin relief expedition. The ministry, he added, was in no sense responsible for the selection of Stanley's staff.

The Irish Leadership.

DUBLIN, November 25.—The Freeman's Journal in its issue of to-day says: The report that Mr. Parnell is to retire from the leadership of the Irish party is absolutely without foundation.

The Dublin Express states that Mr. Gladstone has intimated to Mr. Parnell that it would be better for the Irish cause if he should not attend the coming session of parliament. Mr. Parnell's friends, however, say they will not allow him to absent himself. The Express says that if the opposition persisted in obstructing the work of the session the government will dissolve parliament before Christmas.

LONDON, November 25.—Mr. Parnell held a conference with Mr. Justin McCarthy this forenoon in one of the rooms of the parliament building. During the conference Mr. Parnell handed to Mr. McCarthy a bundle of papers containing memoranda for his guidance as sessional chairman of the Irish party.

A meeting of the Irish home rule members of parliament, was held to-day. Mr. Parnell was present. He was loudly cheered as he entered the room. A motion was made that Mr. Parnell be returned chairman of the Irish parliamentary party. It was carried unanimously.

The nationalist meeting was held in a [illegible]

Mr. Parnell made an address to the meeting in which he declared that [illegible] for the Irish members to do whatever he should lead them. If the decision had been a negative one [illegible] had been a diversity of opinion among them he would cheerfully have withdrawn from public life. Nothing but the conviction that his colleagues desired to utilize his services on their common cause, induced him to retain a position which under the altered circumstances exposed him and them through him, to the attacks of their opponents.

Mr. Parnell, subsequent to his reelection to the Irish leadership, had a conference with Mr. John Morley and Mr. Charles Russell. Notwithstanding his endorsement by the nationalist party Mr. Parnell may for a time withdraw from parliament.

Gladstone's Conclusion.

LONDON, November 25.—At the request of Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Morley has communicated to Mr. Parnell the following letter, written on Monday:

DEAR MR. MORLEY:—Having arrived at a certain conclusion with regard to the question of Mr. Parnell's leadership of the Irish party I have seen Mr. McCarthy on my arrival in town and have inquired from him whether I am likely to receive from Mr. Parnell himself any communication on the subject. Mr. McCarthy replied that he was unable to give me any information. I mentioned to him that in 1882, after the terrible murders in Phœnix park, Mr. Parnell although totally relieved from any idea of responsibility, had spontaneously written me and offered to take the Chiltern Hundreds, an offer much to his honor, but which I thought it my duty to decline.

While clinging to the hope of a communication from Mr. Parnell, to whomsoever addressed, I thought it necessary, viewing the arrangements for the common meeting of the session to-morrow, to acquaint Mr. McCarthy with the conclusion at which, after using all the means of observation and reflection in my power, I had myself arrived. It was that notwithstanding the valuable services rendered by Mr. Parnell to his country, his continuance at the present moment in the leadership would be productive of consequences disastrous in the highest degree to the course of Ireland. I think I may be warranted in asking you so far to expand the conclusions given above as to add that Mr. Parnell's continuance as leader would not only place many hearty and effective friends of the Irish cause in a position of great embarrassment, but would render my retention of the leadership of the liberal party, based as it has been mainly upon the prosecution of the Irish cause, almost a nullity.

This expansion of my views I begged Mr. McCarthy to regard as confidential, and not intended for his colleagues generally, if he found that Mr. Parnell contemplated spontaneous action, but I also begged that he would make known to the Irish party at their meeting to-morrow that such was my conclusion, if he should find that Mr. Parnell had not in contemplation any step of the nature indicated. I now write you in case Mr. McCarthy should be unable to communicate with Mr. Parnell, as I understand you may possibly have an opening to-morrow through another channel. Should you have such an opening, I beg you to make known to Mr. Parnell the conclusion stated in this letter. I have thought it best to put in terms simple and direct, that much as I should have liked had it lain in my power to alleviate the personal nature of the situation as respecting the manner of conveying which my public duty made it an obligation to say. I rely entirely on your good feeling, tact and judgment.

(Signed) WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE.

Gladstone's Course Approved.

LONDON, November 25.—The liberal leaders are unanimously of the opinion that Mr. Gladstone's course was an absolute necessity. Mr. Gladstone is annoyed because Mr. Parnell, at the meeting of his followers, did not mention his interview with Mr. Morley and resents only Parnell's disregard of his protest. Mr. Gladstone had previously intimated his intention of giving no countenance to any amendment to the address if Mr. Parnell were reelected to the Irish leadership. This explains the sudden ending of to-night's debate.

The conservatives and unionists gleefully chatted in the house over the split in the opposition. The liberal newspapers throughout the country regret Mr. Parnell's decision, and in many instances comment in the strongest terms upon his flouting Gladstone and his contempt for his liberal allies. The conservative and unionist newspapers are rejoicing over a split which they consider as disastrous to the Gladstonian party as that of 1886, and which they believe may possibly prove a fatal blow to the home rule aspirations of the people.

Mr. Morley says Mr. Gladstone hinted obscurely that if Mr. Parnell retained the leadership of the nationalist party he should feel it necessary to reconsider his own position, as all probability of carrying home rule during his lifetime would have disappeared.

Another Meeting Called.

LONDON, November 25.—It is learned that Mr. Gladstone had an interview with Mr. Parnell before the publication of the letter to Mr. Morley, and that he urged Mr. Parnell to retire from the leadership of the nationalist party. The publication of the letter caused intense excitement in the lobbies of the house of commons. The Parnellites gathered in groups and informally discussed the situation resulting from Mr. Gladstone's action. Finally a formal meeting of the nationalist members was called for 10 o'clock to-night.

Differences Arranged.

CHICAGO, November 25.—At to-day's meeting of the World's Columbian commission the report of the joint conference committee of the commission and the local directory to settle the differences of the two bodies on the questions of their relative rights and the duties of the two bodies was presented and adopted as it was adopted by the local directory last night. It is now believed that all chance of friction between those bodies has been removed. It provides for a joint board of control, composed of an equal number of representatives from each.

SIOUX STILL DANCING.

Officials at Pine Ridge Consider the Situation Serious.

Good Indians are About to Join the Dancing Faction.

An Influential Squaw Man Says no Outbreak will Occur.

Ed Smith, of Denver, Whipped by George Godfrey.

Affairs at Pine Ridge.

OMAHA, Neb., November 25.—A Bee special from Pine Ridge agency, S. D., says: The condition to-day is considered critical. General Brooke, Agents Royer and Cooper held a consultation this morning and all admit that the aspect of affairs is serious. The indications are now that the good Indians are on the point of joining the ghost dance faction. What the result will be cannot as yet be seen.

A special from Rushville, Neb., says: To-day, or at the furthest to-morrow, is the time set for a bloody engagement between the soldiers and Indians at Pine Ridge, but advices up to noon to-day report all serene on the battlefield. Your correspondent interviewed Baptiste Conner, a squaw man, now living on the Sioux reservation and having an Indian wife and many children. He is called Big Bat by the Indians, has lived among them for 30 years and is intelligent and wealthy and of wide influence among them. He stated in substance that no outbreak or depredations of any sort would occur. "The Indians have been dancing," said Big Bat, "but that does not signify that they want to murder white settlers or fight soldiers."

The Messiah Craze Extending.

LAWRENCE, Kas., November 25.—Joe Abner, a Cheyenne Indian who arrived at Haskell institute yesterday from the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservation in the Indian Territory, says that the Messiah craze has taken hold of the Indians down there and they are arming themselves and becoming restless. A Sioux Indian, acting as a missionary, has come from the north to teach the new religion to the southern tribes. He preaches to them that any one who does not believe in the new religion will be destroyed, and in this manner he so works upon the imagination of those superstitious people that they fall prostrate to the ground, and while lying there the missionary pretends to cast some spell over them, and when they arise they declare that they have seen the new Christ, and at once join in the ghost dance, which they keep up till exhausted. This new craze has also spread to the Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches, whose reservation joins the Cheyennes and Arapahoes on the south, and the different tribes all join in holding the ghost dances, and are rapidly becoming more restless and desperate as the time for the coming of the new Messiah, who is to lead them to victory, draws near.

No Imminent Danger.

WASHINGTON, November 25.—At General Miles' request the war department to-day issued an order requiring him to report to Major-General Schofield at army headquarters in this city. It is believed that General Miles desires to consult the major general commanding and to explain personally the situation at the Sioux Indian agencies. The fact that he has asked to be summoned here at this time is regarded at the department as indicating that there is no imminent danger of an outbreak.

Stories of Danger Denied.

MINNEAPOLIS, November 25.—The Journal's Pierre, S. D., special says: A party of Pierre people have just returned from Fort Bennett, where they witnessed the issuance of rations to the Indians. They emphatically deny that there is any danger of an outbreak at the Cheyenne agency, although the ghost dancing is still kept up to some extent.

Ammunition Wanted.

WASHINGTON, November 25.—The only telegram received at the war department from the west bearing upon the Indian situation was one requesting an additional supply of ammunition. The impression at the department is that the situation has materially improved.

Ed Smith Whipped.

NEW YORK, November 25.—The 25-round glove contest between Ed Smith of Denver and George Godfrey of Boston, which will take place to-night at Cronheim's theatre, Hoboken, should be one of the best heavy weight boxing events ever seen in this vicinity. Both men are exceedingly clever, and both are in perfect condition. Eastern people are familiar with Godfrey's ability as a scientific strategic and hard hitting pugilist. With a winning record to support his skill, the colored man enjoys the confidence of the Boston sports who will back him for big money. Smith whipped La Blanche in a match, knocked out Mike Cleary and Tom Daly and made a great stand for five rounds in front of Peter Jackson. When only 19 years old he proved himself too clever for Jack Burke, whose skill with the mitts was well known.

The glove fight between Geo. Godfrey, the colored fighter of Providence, R. I., and Ed Smith of Denver, took place to-night on the stage of Cronheim's theatre, Hoboken, and resulted in a victory for Godfrey. The fight was under the auspices of the Puritan Athletic club of Long Island City, and was witnessed by about 800 persons, including delegations from Denver, Providence and Boston. Jere Dunn acted as referee and held the $2,000 purse given by the club. Ex-Umpire John Kelly was timekeeper. The fight was set for 9 o'clock and the men made their appearance at 9:20. Godfrey was seconded by Frank Steel, the Boston lightweight and Jimmy Campbell. William Muldoon, the wrestler and Jack Ashton, the heavyweight, who was recently defeated by Godfrey, looked after Smith's interests. The gloves were weighed and the men got down to business at 9:36 p. m.

From the start it was seen that Smith was over-matched. Godfrey punishing him at will. Smith, however, made a game fight, and several times resumed his work when he was apparently done for. The fight continued with Godfrey taking the advantage in nearly every round until the 22nd round was fought. In the 23rd round Godfrey started in to finish his man and landed a heavy right-hander on Smith's [illegible]

Looking to Berlin.

BERLIN, November 25.—One of the best [illegible] has already to-day the application of 180 physicians who have come here to study the Koch method of treatment, on the ground that it is important for them to have conferred a large number of those who desire to study the method. Already 300 foreign doctors have arrived here for the purpose of informing themselves regarding the treatment.

Professor Koch has been elected an honorary member of the Society for the Preservation of the Public Health.

Dr. Kepler, chief of the Charity Hospital, here, says that the marvelous effects have been produced by the injection of Professor Koch's curative lymph, declares that as yet there has been no proof of the lasting nature of the cure. Kepler says that the lymph has proved indispensable in diagnosing cases where there was doubt of the existence of tuberculosis.

An Important Decision.

CHICAGO, November 25.—Judge Blodgett, in the United States district court this morning, rendered a decision which closely affects the affairs of the interstate commerce law for the punishment of persons and corporations found guilty of making secret special rates. The inter state commerce commission in response to complaints that rates from points west of Chicago have been manipulated in the interests of certain favored shippers caused an inquiry into the matter to be made by the federal grand jury. Among the witnesses called was Charles Counselman, a prominent dealer on the board of trade. He was asked if he had not received rebates on consignments of grain over the principal railroad lines from the west, and under advice of counsel declined to answer, that to do so would tend to criminate himself. He was cited to appear before Judge Blodgett and make answer why he should not be compelled to respond to the queries. The matter was argued yesterday and this morning Judge Blodgett rendered his decision, holding that Mr. Counselman must answer. Mr. Counselman will still refuse to testify and the matter will be taken on appeal to the United States supreme court.

Election Bribery Charged.

CHICAGO, November 25.—A San Francisco special says: Ex-State Senator J. E. Murphy, who was nominated for the democratic candidate for the state senate from this city, obtained an order from Superior Judge Finn citing Senator Stanford to appear before the court commissioner and answer the charges of bribery in the recent election. Murphy charges that he was defeated by his republican competitor, because of money thrown in his district by Stanford, who was working to secure a republican majority in the legislature that would elect him again to the United States senate.

Emperor William's Opinions.

BERLIN, Nov. 25.—Emperor William, in the course of a conversation after the parliamentary dinner given last evening by Chancellor von Caprivi, condemned all dogmatic discussion and animadverted upon the futility of social democratic congresses. His majesty made a number of pointed remarks respecting politicians who did nothing but criticize. It is assumed that he alluded to a prominent critic of the measure introduced in the reichstag. The emperor advocated the improvement of canal and river communication, which work he said was important from both a military and commercial standpoint.

Must Ask for What they Want.

WASHINGTON, November 25.—The democratic members of the board of commissioners of the Columbian commission, having objected at Chicago to some work of the state department in aid of the exposition, Secretary Blaine to-day sent the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25, 1890.

Hon. Thomas M. Waller, Commissioner-elect, Chicago, Ill.:

The offer made by the state department in aid of foreign exhibitors being considered by some of your board as a partisan movement is hereby withdrawn. The department will await the official request of the commissioners for any service they think I can do for the Columbian exposition.

(Signed) JAMES G. BLAINE.

Corroborative Testimony.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., November 25.—There is great interest manifested throughout Texas and Mexico in the case of Mrs. McCabe, wife of Judge McCabe, now on trial at Matamoras, Mex., on the charge of having murdered Judge Stein. The appeal issued by Mrs. McCabe several weeks ago for money to defend herself in the trial, which was published throughout the United States, gave the case widespread notoriety. Mrs. McCabe was not allowed bail, but has been confined to her bed in the cell of a Mexican prison with a severe sickness for nearly two months.

According to the testimony on Saturday and yesterday the accused committed the deed because she had been grossly insulted by Stein. Corporal Vessetti of the Sixth cavalry, stationed at Reynosa, Mex., at the time of the murder, concluded his testimony yesterday. He swore that on the night of the murder Mrs. McCabe was assaulted by Stein on the street after she came out of the theatre, that he grabbed her and attempted to drag her to a lonely part of the town, but that she freed herself from his grasp and ran. About an hour later he heard the pistol shot and recognized to the murdered man the assailant of Mrs. McCabe. The testimony of Vessetti caused much excitement in the court room, as it was unexpected.

Death of an Old Miner.

LEADVILLE, November 25.—Dr. John Barbour, who died in New Windsor, Mexico, a few days ago, was an old resident of Colorado having lived in Leadville a number of years and was one of the characters of the camp. He owned the Robtail mine and made over $50,000 out of it. Dr. Barbour's fortune is estimated at $3,000,000, and he owns property in many of the prominent eastern cities. His mining interests are extensive. He leaves a wife.

Mr. Crocker Still Missing.

DENVER, November 25.—F. B. Crocker, president of the city board of public works, who has been missing since Sunday, has not yet been heard of. It is now generally believed that he became insane over public matters, and has wandered away and committed suicide. Mr. Crocker is not president of the Crocker Cracker Manufacturing company, as stated in these dispatches last night.

The political importance of Mr Parnell's private morality depends on the fact that many of the English supporters of Irish autonomy are followers of Mr Gladstone, in the strictest sects of the non conformists

The Indian situation shows no important change, though it still remains evident that the Sioux are ugly and mean mischief. The presence of the troops at the agencies will probably save them from attack, but if the Indians raid the settlements they can do a great deal of damage before they are arrested

Mr Daniel Greenleaf Thompson has written an elaborate essay on "The Philosophy of Fiction in Literature," in which the principles of the novelist's art are examined in detail, while especial attention is paid to the consideration of the moral aspects of the novel, and of its influence for good or evil. The book will be published shortly by Longmans, Green & Co.

Immigration was a necessary factor in the foundation and growth of our nation. It may still be of great benefit to it. We are all foreigners, or of foreign descent, and there is still no such valuable import as men. But we want them to be men. Most of all we value those nearest in blood, language and sentiments We have unbounded faith in the ability of the Anglo Saxon race of this country to meet and overcome all difficulties, but there is no use in making the way harder than is necessary.

We have received with the compliments of Stanley Wood's Great Divide a characteristic picture, entitled, "Are You Wid Us," representing two jolly young fellows returning from a shooting match with all the honors and evidently intending to "set 'em up" to the boys when they get home. Interpreting the picture thus we cheerfully reply in the affirmative. The Great Divide for December will be the largest and best number yet printed. In order to accommodate both reader and advertiser, the paper will be enlarged 50 per cent, and the edition will be increased 100 per cent. Over 40,000 copies will be published The illustrations are very numerous, interesting and attractive and are gems of artistic excellence.

General Booth's plan for the redemption of the pauper and criminal classes of Darkest England, is complete and complex. Colonization as a remedy for over-population is a political bloodletting scheme which has been fashionable for at least two thousand years, and has at least the merit of benefitting the land to which the colonists sail. General Booth, however, supplements the colonization scheme with a city institution where temporary relief is provided for immediate necessities, and an agricultural training school in the country where intending colonists may receive such practice and instruction as will help them in their new life of labor and self-respect beyond the sea. Much interest was felt in the general's book when it first appeared, and to the surprise of some this has scarcely abated. Large sums of money have already been subscribed and the new plan will undoubtedly be given a fair trial. Even if no great amount of benefit ensues, England may at least claim credit for a serious effort to rid herself of that constantly increasing body of chronic pauperism and crime which has been so conspicuous a national disgrace

ORGANIZED CHARITY

We most heartily commend the effort now being made to establish an organized system of public charity in this city It is not necessary to speak of it as an experiment which is likely to prove successful, for it has already been tried elsewhere with results that leave but little doubt of the benefit it will be here In Denver especially, a city much like our own in many ways, the plan has given satisfaction to all who have become familiar with its workings

There is one objection which is, perhaps worthy of serious consideration It has been urged elsewhere, and will undoubtedly occur to some here who are asked to contribute towards this good work It is that this way of giving through a committee does away with personal contact that fragrant flower of charity from which spring its sweetest fruits

"Better I lose the pearl and crust,
Better the loosing of the root,
Though I turn me empty from his door
That is no friend unto which the hand can bind
He gives but silver, but worthiest gold
Who gives from a sense of duty"

says Lowell, with something of a poet's exaggeration But in this case the objection is not a valid one. "Charity loses nothing of its loving kindness by being entirely wise," rightly said Rev S A. Eliot last Sunday If every one had the poet's thought and were free to act upon it, there would perhaps be no need for aid societies But the merchant in his store, the house wife, and others who are usually busy, often have calls on their charity whose character they cannot possibly investigate and charity ill-bestowed is often worse for the receiver than none at all Then there is a class, common enough here, who are physically unable to help the poor Perhaps they are sick, perhaps they do not know how and fear to offend whom they would serve It must be a welcome opportunity to many invalids now here in comfortable circumstances to help others less fortunate than themselves and by highest transmutation, change gold to health and earnest deeds

It can also be said in favor of the new plan that it is systematic The unobtrusive aim of charity is to help those who need it, and in the way that will be best for them There is waste and wrong in overwhelming one person with gifts while another is in want, as there is also in alternating periods of abundance and privation Then, too, the vicious poor, for much of poverty is due to vice can hardly be dealt with except by an organization References can best be looked up, frauds detected, idlers induced to work the proper line of work observed between the demand of the social and the innocent ones deprived upon them by those who have more experience and acquaintance than are at the command of most private individuals

It is a good feature of the new plan that it is supplementary rather than exclusive It hinders no one from doing all the good he can in all the ways he can It does much good that could be done in no other way It does the great bulk of charity in a way more effective than any other It deserves the hearty sympathy and what is more important financial help from all

Colorado Farmers' Alliance.

PUEBLO, November 25 — The state convention of the Farmers' Alliance met in this city at 10 o'clock this morning The convention was called to order by J H Brammeir, president of the alliance. A committee on credentials was appointed A miscellaneous discussion occupied the morning session At the afternoon session the committee on credentials reported 40 delegates, representing 16 counties Committees were appointed on resolutions, constitution, co operation, education, finance and order of business. In the evening a large audience listened to a lecture by Mrs. Lease, of Kansas.

A Receiver Appointed.

PORTLAND, Ore., November 25 —In the United States district court to-day a decree was entered appointing Joseph Simon receiver of the Oregon Improvement company. His bonds were fixed at $100,000

SEATTLE, Wash, November 25 —Resident Manager McNeil, of the Oregon Improvement company, showed genuine surprise when informed of the reported application for a receivership He simply said: "I don't know anything about it, and have nothing to say about it. From another well informed source it is stated that the trouble dates back to Villard's management of the company. When he left the company there was a floating debt of several millions, the existence of which could not be explained This debt has never been cleared off When the first mortgage on the property was issued the bonds were not immediately sold, but were hypothecated to raise money, and the company now on the verge of defaulting in the payment of the money and going into the hands of a receiver.

Owing to the condition of the money market it was impossible to renew the loans. For the past year the company has been engaged in the purchase and development of railroad lines in Washington, causing a large outlay of money The liabilities of the company are about $2,000 000 Bonds secured by a consolidated mortgage to the amount of $4 514 000 of principal, being equal in amount to the entire amount outstanding of first mortgages, are now in the possession of the Farmers Loan and Trust company as trustee. Consolidated mortgage bonds to the amount of $800 000 are now outstanding Loans to the amount of $1,750,000 from individuals and corporations will mature in a few days Many of these loans are held in New York city.

The application further sets forth that the Oregon Improvement company, conceiving its duty to protect its property, and to treat the same as a trust fund for security first for its creditors and then for its stockholders, determined to appeal to the court for the receiver, thereby preventing the destruction of their transportation system and the complication of its affairs by numerous suits which would inevitably follow unless this step was taken.

How Chinese are Smuggled in.

SPOKANE FALLS, Wash, November 25 —The joint congressional committee on immigration, consisting of Senator Squire of Washington and Representatives Leblback and Stump of Maryland held three sessions here yesterday and took testimony relative to Chinese and immigration generally Two special customs inspectors, patrolling the international boundary in Stevens and Okanogan counties, testified that Chinese are being constantly smuggled across the border They are helped by the Chinamen on the Colville Indian reservation who have married squaws Owing to the length of the border the inspectors can only reach the leading trails and passes. They recommend the establishment of two or three stations in remote regions where the inspectors cannot venture now for lack of supplies and an act requiring the Chinese to take out certificates, so hereafter they can be distinguished from smuggled Chinamen

ST JOHNS November 25 —One of the most horrible accidents that ever took place in this vicinity occurred at South Bay this morning The boilers in the mill of O. O. This is reported as a part of liabilities which amount to $1,500 000 for which mortgages, chattel and real, have been filed by the concern, in favor of creditors in different counties of the state The action of the company is looked upon by lumbermen here as a forerunner of an extensive collapse.

The Old Colleges and University Towns of England

Some Interesting Glimpses of Oxford and the River.

Buildings There have the Perspective of History.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

There is a saying in England that Oxford starts movements but Cambridge turns out men. It is scarcely necessary to add that this saying is the more popular at Cambridge and is only quoted at Oxford with a sort of sneer yet there is a good deal of truth in it and so strongly do old college towns take on the tone of their respective colleges that it seemed to me the very air of Oxford was classical conservative and suggestive of Newman and the Tractarians.

It is also said that Oxford is more restricted and Cambridge more liberal. Oxford lays great stress on the classics while Cambridge runs to science and the so called practical studies. As a readers of history know Oxford was long the great Tory stronghold she welcomed Charles I, was faithful to Charles II and stood unflinchingly by the doctrine of passive obedience until James II actually kicked her into the humor for a instance. And all this can be felt in the air so to speak. The very porters and stable boys seem to say in their every action. If you want anything vulgarly radical or revolutionary you've come to the wrong shop. The tall and solemn looking waiter who runs the hall and smoking room looks at one in a way that plainly says: Ah, you are from a land of democracy but we must strive to be civil. And even the young woman who serves the bar in the smoking room though handsome as all barmaids are in English hotels is handsome in a strictly Oxford way, and as she sets my glass of bitter ale before me her attitude seems to say: Don't imagine because you've paid sixpence for it that you are at all like Oxford people.

The most modern thing in the city however is the Clarendon hotel and it flies the American flag. When I was in contentful I learned and the reasons are good. The landlord, Lord Cecil Rogers, is a grandson of Thomas Oliver the last English colonial governor of Massachusetts and is a loyal American owning land in Indiana. He keeps the American flag flying on great occasions and in these occasions [illegible] I received what I believe to be the true origin of the name of Bunker Hill. A matter so mean that discussed in Boston I resolve a surface that it was transferred from Bunker's hill near Belfast. It was in fact, named from Tom Bunkers a large estate in Antigua owned by the Oliver family and Mr. Rogers has the documents to prove it.

As a great resort for undergraduates in a modern old style English hotel the Clarendon is worthy of study with its dancing hall and banqueting hall used when the Prince of Wales visits Oxford its stalls for [illegible] kennels for the hounds, private club rooms and general artistic and literary atmosphere. But I was disappointed by the various college buildings. They are in fact great [illegible] and [illegible] has [illegible] their [illegible] and [illegible] just enough but they lack the great charm of American college the noble [illegible] through vistas of towering trees, the broad green campus and the far reaching grove. The largest college is entered directly from the main street and though within the [illegible] quadrangle there is a [illegible] plot of half an acre or so one passes at the rear into a narrow and ugly street of rather mean looking houses. On one side rise the noble gables of the college. On the other

MR. STANLEY AT HOME.

Pen Picture of the Explorer as He Was and Is.

A Letter from One who Knows the Traveler Well.

Man of Many Qualities, Not All of Which are Severe.

(Copyrighted, 1890.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—When a man has just lived such an experience like that of H. M. Stanley and conquered his right to fame by the hardest kind of battle, which after spending years in fighting his way among savages, plodding across untrodden wilds and through African jungles, carrying his life in his hand, he returns to his native England, not speaking his native tongue, which after opening a continent to civilization and bringing back with him a long missing explorer, he returns to Europe honored by kings and princes, exalted by scientists and praised by all men, and finally reaching his American home, he gives his old friends with the simple, unaffected cordiality that characterized the beginning of his career—it must be confessed that success has neither turned his head nor heart.

I was prepared to see Stanley changed both physically and socially. It seemed impossible that a man could experience so much vicissitude and not somehow show its impress. But despite the jealousies he has encountered, the disagreements among some of his lieutenants, the misunderstanding of Emin Pasha, the ugly controversy that has grown out of the killing of Maj. Bartlelot by a savage chief, who, it is alleged, thus avenged an injury done to his wife, the criticisms of the foreign press, and lastly the tortures of the inquisition he has undergone at the hands of the interviewers, notwithstanding all these afflictions, I found him the loyal, warm hearted friend of old. In the presence of others than intimate acquaintances however, the strong individuality of the man asserts itself, and his bearing is cold and dignified almost to the degree of sternness.

Physically, or rather physiognomically, the change was more apparent and startling. When we parted sixteen years ago his figure was like that of an athlete in superb training, his face round and unwrinkled and his hair dark. Now he looks prematurely old. His hair is white and there appears to be less elasticity in his movements than formerly, all of which Stanley ascribes to the African fever and the hardship and anxiety incident to his last expedition. There is no mistaking the keenness of his eye, however, and the determination written in every line of his bronzed features.

Personally Stanley never was a handsome man, although his broad shoulders and thick neck would attract any one who admired strength, but his face was always, as it is at present, endowed with an intellectuality that is pleasurable. It is the face of a man born to command, resolute, aggressive, and one that at times may become dangerous in its expression. For this reason it is not difficult to understand why even alone and single handed he could both intimidate and encourage his savage followers. Doubtless it is this imperious manner, added to rigid discipline, that not only kept his white associates in check, but aroused the spirit that has since their arrival in England found vent in recrimination and complaint.

The most vital points of interest connected with Stanley's last expedition having been already made public with much detail our conversation chiefly concerned early reminiscences, and it was a surprise to observe how closely his memory retained the incidents of a meeting that took place as far back as 1874. He was then on a visit to New York, after having found Livingstone, although his reception was very different from that which has been accorded him now. In fact, some of the newspapers doubted his exploit and pronounced him little less than a fraud. He felt it keenly. He reminded me too, of his proposition during our interview at that time to organize an American company with a capital of only $100,000 of which he proposed to advance from $25,000 to $40,000, for the purpose not merely of continuing his explorations, but to establish trading posts in the neighborhood of Lake Tanganyika and other localities he had visited, where were to be found immense stores of ivory, oils and gums. An endeavor was made among some of the capitalists in Wall street the very next day to raise the required sum, but to a man they turned their back upon the proposition, and thus lost at once a chance to realize great fortunes and to do what Stanley afterward induced the king of the Belgians to undertake namely to plant his flag there and establish a state.

Stanley also humorously recalled what he termed one of his "castles in Spain," that he saw gradually wing up as the result of his nearly accumulated wealth. After establishing the company above described he went to return to New York, marry, live quietly at a mansion on the Hudson, and at with bungalows built in oriental style where all the poets of New York could meet and enjoy in idleness and stock the grounds with animals.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

An Old New Book—The Wonderful Sales of Miss Cummings' Works.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—One of the new books of the fall is "El Purgatorio," by Miss Maria S. Cummings. Really it is not a new book as it was written by Miss Cummings thirty years ago was published and was forgotten. Within the past two or three years however attention has been called to the extraordinary achievement of Miss Cummings, and so much has been said about it and her that the publishers decided to bring out this book. With two or three exceptions the story written by Miss Cummings which is called "The Lamp Lighter" has been the most successful American story ever written. With Cooper's "Spy," and "Leather Stocking Tales," and Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." "The Lamp Lighter" stands chief among the books by American authors whose sales have been prodigious and never ceasing.

Maria Cummings was a saloon, Mass. girl and expected to make teaching her life business. The literary impulse possessed her however, and she wrote short sketches and stories early in the fifties which were well liked, but which gave no evidence of the phenomenal success which was in store for her. In 1854 was published "The Lamp Lighter." It made an extraordinary hit. Over 40,000 copies were sold within two months after the book was published and it shared with "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which had then been published only two or three years, the literary excitement of the day.

It was a touching love story and was deeply inspired with religious sentiment. It did not deal with a great political theme, as did "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and therefore did not command the immediate attention or excite as the importance of moral and moral influence which Mrs. Stowe's great work did. But it was found in almost every home sold in the north and east its fame spread abroad and it was reprinted. The book has also stood the test of time. Although it is thirty six years since it was first published it still has a steady sale and is to be found on the bookshelves of any well kept book store. One of the ablest publishers in New York city says that "The Lamp Lighter is sure to be kept in stock hereafter just as are the English classics."

This is a greater success for the book than was the pecuniary one. Books have been published which have exceeded in sale that of "The Lamp Lighter," although this story has already sold about 160,000 copies. "Helen's Babies," that skit of the moment, "That Husband of Mine" and a half a dozen other books have had a temporary sale reaching very large figures, and have then been forgotten, but the sale of "The Lamp Lighter" has not only been steady, but for two or three years past has been increasing. The copyright will not run out for eight years yet, but when it does the sale will probably be largely increased.

Miss Cummings therefore, has had the distinguished fortune of not only making a great popular hit, but of having written a book which has stood the test of time. In this respect only one American novelist of the male sex has equaled her achievement, at least of writers prior to 1870. Cooper's books, of course, are classic, and their sale has been enormous. Hawthorne's novels are classic, but while they made a literary success they never secured quick popularity. It is a curious fact that of the American fiction writers who wrote prior to 1860, only one who books were both enormously popular at publication and have continued so ever since was a man. That was James Fenimore Cooper. While, on the other hand, four writers achieved instantaneous success of the most splendid kind, and their books have ever since been in constant demand, and probably will remain so for many years. And these were women.

They are Mrs. Stowe, with her "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Miss Cummings, with "The Lamp Lighter," Miss Evans with "Beulah" and "St. Elmo," and the Warner sisters, with "The Wide, Wide World." All of these books were written many years ago, all of them won instantaneous and enormous popularity, and all of them have been steadily in demand ever since. This record alone should set at rest all question as to the ability of women to compete with men in the field of fiction. For they have done so with more permanent success than any of the male writers.

The Warner sisters and Miss Cummings remained until their deaths unmarried. Miss Evans married after she had established her literary repute, and Mrs. Stowe was the wife of a struggling clergyman when she wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The achievement of the Warner sisters was perhaps the most remarkable, because they lived always in absolute seclusion on the banks of the Hudson river, and drew from their own imagination and intuitions the scene and treatment of their pathetic story. Mrs. Stowe had lived in the south, and half drawn some of the incidents and characters in her immortal work from life.

WORLD'S FAIR GOSSIP.

It Is Now Time for the States and Territories to Go to Work.

(Special Correspondence.)

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—Now it is the turn of the states and territories—every one of them—to put their best foot forward in the direction of a creditable representation of their interests at the World's Columbian exposition. The local directory has fully redeemed all the pledges upon which the location of the enterprise was finally conceded to the Garden City. Its hands were tied in a very large degree until the people of the city and state at the recent election approved by their votes the proposition for the issue of bonds to a total of $5,000,000 for the fair's treasury.

Now that this large amount is within sight, and an additional million and a half actually in hand, the contract with the government has been fulfilled to the letter, contracts can be let without the fear that there will be no money with which to meet the demands of contractors, the president can issue his invitation to foreign governments to participate, and the states can proceed to get their organizing machinery into motion. Some of them, in fact including Vermont, Texas, Iowa and California, have already shown themselves entitled to special credit and recognition upon the roll of fame by inaugurating their preparations in advance of the formal invitation of the national commission. Over thirty legislatures will be in session between now and February, and every one of them can certainly be depended upon to manifest a liberality in the matter of appropriations that will enable its respective commonwealth to make an exhibit representative in the highest degree.

As an indication of what is expected it is interesting to note that the Iowa legislature has already appropriated a round fifty thousand dollars for preliminary expenses alone coupled with an intimation that twice that sum would be forthcoming for the exhibit proper when the body reassembles next year. The legislatures however, ought not to be expected to bear the entire brunt of the financial obligation. In every state the well to do citizens, actuated by patriotism toward their country and a public spirited pride toward their commonwealth, should get together and supplement what is done by their lawgivers with public subscriptions. This is the idea at the bottom of the national commission, and it will be heartily seconded by the states.

There seems to have been a great deal of feeling with reference to the fair in continental countries during the past few weeks. The venom and malice which a few months ago characterized the utterances of many influential foreign journals regarding the enterprise have given way to a tone of calm consideration, and now there is scarcely a doubt but that the Old World will be represented in a creditable manner and on a generous scale in the event that the commission proceeds to prosecute its work in the spirit and with the liberality that has been inaugurated. Committees representing the special interests of the fine arts, manufactures, etc., are now in Europe, and headquarters for the bureau of France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden and Mexico and in several of the leading art and musical centers of Europe independent organizations have already been inaugurated, looking to the special representation of the fine arts. Almost daily, moreover, the headquarters is visited by some prominent foreigner from one country or another who is anxious to acquaint himself with what has been done and what remains to be done.

One such visitor the other day was the German art commissioner to the Melbourne exposition, and another was the wife of a Mexican nobleman, who recently offered to contribute as a loan exhibition the finest collection of Murillo's paintings that exists, together with a collection of bronze and marbles that has been gradually accumulated ever since the days of Cortez, the Spanish conqueror of Mexico. With such evidences of sympathy and interest on every hand who can doubt but that the presidential invitation to the world will be cordially received and just as cordially responded to?

HENRY M. HEYN.

AFRICANUS AND AFRICANA

Pen Picture of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley by Alfred Balch.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The lady is first as of right. Mrs. Henry M. Stanley, she who was Miss Dorothy Tennant, is tall and slight. She has a wealth of golden brown hair, her eyes are large, soft and brown, her complexion is like porcelain and she had when she arrived in New York a great deal of color. She walks gracefully with a lissome movement and her feet are as small as those of an American belle. She is slender and her figure is good. When she arrived on the Teutonic she wore a circular of black cloth trimmed with gray fur, a black hat and a free veil. She moves continually to a position near her husband and she has a habit of taking refuge behind him when she is talking. This however seems to be a subconscious, for she will retreat behind her husband Mrs. Tennant is near, when questioned by any one she does not know well. She has a wonderfully sympathetic expression, the look of a born artist and the contrast between herself and her husband recalls the old proverb about corporeal and spiritual.

It may be the fame which Stanley's African exploits has won as a traveler and explorer as a man who on no difficulties may daunt and no dangers detain that produced in my mind the impression on he was physically a big man. What was my surprise at his being the smallest man in the group standing near the Teutonic as I was pointed out to me as the man from Africa. Stanley is about 5 feet 9 inches. I should judge. His face is of a peculiar color. There seems to be an under color of tan, as though he had been darkened by the sun and the scarf skin had been put on afterward. His hair is silver white, the tint being that of frosted metal. His eyes are hazel and rather small and he has a trick of half closing them when talking to you. His mustache is white, and there is not enough of it to hide the expression of his mouth, which looks as though he might be terribly bitter in his speech on occasion. His figure is compact, and he moves as only those move who are physically powerful.

He is carelessness in his dress, as are most men who have spent much time in the free life of the wild, he wore his gloves unbuttoned and one end of his coat collar turned up. He is terribly earnest in manner, he impresses you, moves you, by this earnestness. Generally he talks in a rather low tone of voice, but his sentences can ring out as he becomes excited by the subject matter of his speech. His voice is wonderfully sympathetic in timbre, it recalls the description of Cardinal Newman's voice: "There are tears in it." As he spoke of the men who died at Yambuya, the Arabs and Zanzibaris, I wish you could have heard the pathos, the exceeding mourning, of the words "These men were my men, my officers. They did not belong to the committee they were mine. Many of them were old and tried friends whom I had trusted only to find them true. My friends died there." His voice expressed the sorrow as well as the rage which filled his heart as he thought of that long tragedy.

The man seems to be devoid of humor. Jokes affect him not, nor does he approach them in his talk. He is grim as well as earnest. He repels and attracts at the same time. He has an air of infinite patience, and in his talk you are impressed by an evident roughness shown in small things. This expresses to you his success. Nothing is so little as to be without a claim on his attention, nothing so large that he will not study it. But the suffering he has gone through has left its mark for on his face there is a look of one who has drawn the veil and looked at death face to face yet I am not afraid.

ALFRED BALCH.

Southern Writers in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Mrs. Margaret Appleton Baker of Baltimore is a relative of Mrs. Jerome Bonaparte. She is a versatile writer and a prominent member of the Woman's Press club.

Mrs. Bastie, another southern woman, has been upon the editorial staff of The Sun for twenty years. She has the society and fashion department and is assisted by a corps of younger writers. "Aunt Fanny" Barrow is a native of Charleston, S. C. She lives in her own handsome house in New York. She has written seventy books for children among which are the Nightcap series. Her sister married Richard Grant White.

Miss Mary Tucker Magill writes for Harper's publications. A recent story is entitled "Sis." She is a Virginian and has written a history of her own state which is in extensive use in the schools. She has visited Arizona and is preparing a book upon that very interesting part of our country. While there she carried her own camera and made photographs which will be used in illustrating the book.

The prettiest newspaper woman in New York is Miss Elizabeth Bisland of Georgia. She was for merly engaged on The Times-Democrat of New Orleans. Coming to New York she became the managing editor of The World. She is now one of the staff of The Cosmopolitan Magazine. With her a writer who has a strong literary reputation for beauty that herself she occupies a flat in Park avenue. Her rooms are elegant and are handsomely furnished. The dining room has a dado and frieze of water colors. The ceiling represents a silver clouded sky and the wood work and furniture are of King solomon. The library walls are in identical books the shelves ornamented by costly bronzes while rich rugs cover the floors. She is a brunette of stately form and she is rapidly winning her way.

Egyptian Translations of the Bible.

Of the early translations of the Bible the most important, aside from the Septuagint and the St. Jerome version, are the three Gothic, then translations of the Fourth century. This remarkable work of the copyist was in three languages and was intended for all parts of Egypt—the Versio Figurata, collected by Jacob of Edessa in the Eighth century that of Paul, bishop of Tela, in 617, and the Eighth, Ninth and Tenth century translations, made respectively by Bede, Alfred and Ælfric.—Exchange.

Any persons willing to make donations for the lunches and suppers to be given December 4th and 5th in connection with the fair will kindly communicate with Mrs. W. F. Anderson, chairman of the refreshment committee.

An attempted hold up on the Colorado City road was reported yesterday morning during the night previous.

A social will be given at the residence of Mr. Wm. Lenox, 426 Pike's Peak avenue, Thanksgiving evening by the Y. P. S. C. E. of the First M. E. church.

The North W. C. T. U. will meet today at two o'clock sharp at the U. P. church. All members and friends are requested to be in attendance.

Mr. W. S. Robertson, formerly of Kansas, has purchased the stock of the San Francisco Tea Company, opposite the post office, and will conduct the business.

The ladies of the Colorado City Relief Corps, the G. A. R. and the Modern Woodmen will give a dinner at that place tomorrow for the benefit of the needy soldiers' widows and orphans.

Mr. Clarence O. Finch, formerly connected with the daily papers in Lawrence, Kas., and Kansas City, is now connected with the Republican of this city in an editorial and reportorial capacity.

The second target practice by Company A will occur to morrow morning on new grounds east of the city. This will be an official score and will be sent onto headquarters at Denver. The company will leave the armory at 8:30 for the practice grounds in fatigue uniform.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE 1891.

The Tariff and the Farmer.

The Tribune will devote much space during the year to the Tariff as it affects the Farmer and the Mechanic. Hon. Roswell G. Horr of Michigan has become a member of the Tribune's staff of Tariff writers for this purpose. He will devote himself to this topic, and will invite and receive contributions on points which affect the American Farmer and Mechanic. He will also, as his other duties will allow, attend Farmers' Institutes, agricultural gatherings, the meeting of grangers and wool growers, with the view of the Tariff.

Those who desire the presence of Mr. Horr at Farmers' Institutes, etc., are invited to correspond promptly with The Tribune.

Young Men who wish to Succeed.

Many a man feels the lack of early direction of energies and early inculcation of the ways and principles the formation of character and success after life. What shall I Do? By K. S. Parkhurst, President of Packard's Business College.

Suggestions for the Boys on the Farm who are Ambitious. By the Hon. J. H. Brigham, Delta, Ohio, Master of the National Grange.

ORIENTAL BEAUTIES.

[illegible] Mohammed [illegible]

Let us suppose that you are a European or American lady traveling along the North African seaboard and about to pay a visit to the fair beauties in the harem of some great Moorish dignitary in Morocco. Following the two tall red coats, which marked Moorish soldiers, you conduct you, you thread your way through a labyrinth of narrow, gloomy, hilly lanes almost blocked at times by heaps of dust and rubbish, among which mumps of gaunt, wolfish dogs are rooting hungrily. Meanwhile your two guides clear the way for your horse or donkey through the eddying whirl of men, boys, camels, asses, horses and old women by constant shouts of "Chelah! chelah!" clack outs and remorseless punches with the brass shod butts of their rifles.

At length you halt in front of a high, bare, windowless wall, the only visible opening in which is a deep shadowy porch of the key shaped form peculiar to Saracenic architecture, edged with curious fretwork, and brilliantly painted with alternate stripes of crimson and blue. This leads into a marble paved quadrangle with a tiny fountain splashing and tinkling in the center—the epitome of all Spaniards, in fact, borrowed by them from their Moorish conquerors. Shady colonnades run along its four sides, above which are cloistered passages protected by screens of lattice work. And now you discover why the outside of a Moorish house is always windowless, for with a jealous precaution thoroughly characteristic of the east all the windows open upon this inner court.

Visitors being frequently received in the court itself, it is strewn with mats or carpets, and shaded from the weather by a colored awning, which subdues the burning African sunshine into a rich summer gloom of purple twilight, such as that which fills the aisles of some vast cathedral. Beyond this lies a spacious saloon, with a richly carpeted floor and a paneled ceiling for which any Venetian noble of the Fourteenth century would gladly have given half his yearly revenue. No chairs are to be seen, but the soft cushions scattered about the floor and the velvet or damask bolsters placed along the sides of the room show where the inmates are wont to sound or to recline. The upper part of the wall is frescoed with appropriate texts from the Koran in quaint arrowy eastern characters, while along the lower part damask hangings of white, scarlet or blue mask the doorways of several bedrooms, from which three or four steps of polished white marble lead down into the saloon itself.

Suddenly the hangings of a curtained archway at the far end of the room are thrust aside, and the master of the house in person comes forward to greet you—a stately old eastern gentleman in flowing Moorish robes, whose long silky beard is as white as the many folded turban that overshadows it. He puts his hand to his forehead in graceful oriental salutation and begs you in broken French or Spanish if you do not understand Arabic to consider his house and all that it contains as your own, after which you are requested to honor with the touch of your feet the threshold of his harem."

Following the old gentleman's guidance you are led through a maze of dark passages and low doorways, till you feel as if playing a never ending game of hide and seek. At length you halt before a flight of broad marble steps, leading up to a high archway, through the curtains of which come the ripple of female voices and the silver tinkle of girlish laughter. Beside the steps stand, like bronze statues, two gigantic black slaves, gorgeous in white and crimson, with drawn swords gleaming in their huge bony hands. But at the sight of their master and the Frankish khanum's foreign lady the sabres are lowered, in silence the curtains fall back and you are ushered into the midst of a scene which appears to have come bodily out of the "Arabian Nights."

Before you lies a large oval hollow room, the shadowy interior of which looks bewilderingly vaulted and shaded after the blazing glare outside. The rich Persian carpets have enough of the flower and bird tint to give you an idea of those miracles of oriental mosaic which you will view by and by when you visit the Bey Mosque at Algiers. [illegible] hung upon the walls [illegible] of Tunis and Cairo. [illegible] speaking [illegible] that [illegible] stately [illegible] their colors [illegible] and [illegible] sunny [illegible]

At the end of the room [illegible] a small [illegible] which divides the rest of the room from which it is separated by a [illegible] balustrade somewhat like a large [illegible] stile. This balcony is lighted by a swinging lamp of antique gold filled with perfumed oil, the soft light of which is flashed back in a thousand sparkles from the countless tiny mirrors that cover like scales the whole surface of the wall.

In the alcove sit or recline upon soft cushions about a dozen women, some of them not yet past girlhood, representing all types, from the sleek, tiger like beauty of the Circassian to the heavy, expressionless, voluptuous features of the West African Jaloff. At first sight they [illegible]

POLITICAL REVULSIONS

Once Jackson's Time They Have Multiplied.

[illegible]

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The moral of the late election, as many all speaking, is self evident. As older the country grows the more decisive each election becomes and the comparatively small change in the popular vote makes an enormous change in the representative vote.

Garfield is supposed to have had a "sweeping victory"—214 electoral votes to 155. Yet his plurality on the popular vote was but 7,098 out of 9,000,000 for the two leading candidates—less than one tenth of 1 per cent! A change of 4,000 votes in sixty in one state in 1888 would have elected Cleveland. Yet Harrison had 233 electoral votes to 168. Fifty thousand votes, or one in 230 of the total, located in close states, would have given Cleveland an "overwhelming victory" in the electoral colleges. And where is the politician wise enough to foresee the trifling accident that may change one vote in 236.

Except in 1880 the result was a foregone conclusion at each election till 1824. Then the foundations of the great political deeps were broken up. Of the four candidates John Quincy Adams was chosen by the house of representatives, although Gen. Jackson had a much larger popular and electoral vote. The people were angry, yet, strange to say, of all the great men then living not one foresaw the revolution of 1828—the first great political revolution of our history.

The scandals of that campaign were simply frightful. Those good old people who think the world is growing worse should read some of the campaign papers of 1828. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that Mrs. Jackson was murdered. She saw her name paraded in the public prints as that of the wife of women, but bore up till the election was over and then died, nominally of heart disease.

On the day of the election the great Whig leader [illegible] confident prophecy. The whole number of electoral votes was 261, of which Jackson received 178 and Adams 83. For vice president Calhoun received 171, all Adams 99. In the house of representatives then elected Andrew Stephenson was chosen speaker by 152 votes to 39 for all others. And yet issues were so little defined that there was a majority in congress for the United States bank.

The election of 1832 could not be called a revolution, yet it was even more surprising. It was exultingly proclaimed, and not denied by Jackson's friends, that nearly all the wealth and three-fourths of the professional men were against him. The number of electoral votes was 288, of which Jackson received 219 and Clay 49. Vermont voted for Wirt, anti-Mason, and South Carolina for John Floyd, whom the historians have charitably allowed to be forgotten.

In 1836 Van Buren received 170 electoral votes and Harrison but 73. The game of 1837 "got rather the ancient landmarks," as the journals of the day expressed it, and the congress of 1839-41 showed a great falling off. Still the Democrats were able to elect as speaker the once noted and often revived Robert Mercer Talaferro Hunter, of Virginia. In 1840 the revolution was complete—Harrison received 234 electoral votes and Van Buren 60. This was not so great a surprise as it now seems, for the country really was in a very bad way. Two years later came the greatest surprise perhaps in our history—the Whigs elected but 69 congressmen and the Democrats 140.

In 1844 the tide ran almost nearly the same yet in 1846 the Whigs chose 115 congressmen and the Democrats but 108. The election of Taylor in 1848 was followed by a Democratic congress, but the steady decline of the Whigs was no surprise. The last fight was in 1852, when they got but 71 congressmen to the Democrats 159. Two years later came the tremendous political revolution of which we are the direct posterity. The division of parties in the Thirty fourth congress was as follows, to wit: Democrats [illegible] Whigs [illegible] and a combination of Republicans [illegible] speaker.

The [illegible] was [illegible] but parties [illegible] less evenly balanced than appeared on the surface. At any rate [illegible] in 1856 [illegible] lost [illegible] and in 1858 [illegible] lost [illegible] all the [illegible] states [illegible] the administration.

The great Democratic victories must be regarded as exceptions to the general rules, never less so than the Democrats who had elected [illegible] to congressmen in 1862. [illegible] 1872 to the Republicans [illegible] among the greatest of exceptions. The majority of 343,000 for Grant in 1872 gave place to a Democratic majority of about 60,000 in 1874, and in the Forty fourth congress the [illegible]
